The weather prophet is usually a humbug. If not intentionally an imposter he deceives himself. The remark does not apply to the men who run the official weather bureaus in this prophets and do not profess to be so. Their predictions or indications are much of the same character as the remark made by a man who sees a runaway horse coming down the street and says: "He will be here in a few minutes." They are informed by telegraph or otherwise that certain storm conditions exist at a named place, and they know the general direction in which the storm is moving. Hence they can advise that it will probably reach another area, and do so in much the same way that a railroad official will predict the arrival of a train several hours in ad-

But the weather prophet, says the Chicago Tribune, properly so called and improperly so considered, does not make his predictions from such data. He claims to have independent information that storm conditions will rage at some time and place, which he states more or less explicitly before those conditions are known to have exhibited themselves at any other point. This is the kind of work that has been a failure from long before the publication of "Old Moore's Almanac" down through the times of Pardridge, Tice and Wiggins to the present day. Occasionally the prophets have struck a coincidence, and Old Moore was singularly successful in the moist climate of England by stringing along through the column for a whole month the words: "Aboutthese-days-expect-rain," or similar sentences, which covered a great deal of ground with little meaning.

A Great Rogue Catcher.

Since the telegraph has been brought to about as near the point of perfection as it is likely to attain, and telegraphic communication has been established to the remotest parts of the world, it has become very difficult for rogues to escape its searching ways. Once in a while a fugitive from justice manages to elude his pursuers, but, the Electric Review thinks, if the party sought is of sufficient importance to be in special request his whereabouts are likely to be discovered. One of the most notable instances of failure in that respect on record is that of Marsh, late president of the Keystone bank, Philadelphia, who has thus far managed to elude arrest, but it is generally conjectured that if certain parties desired his presence his present home could be readily determined. Among the many instances of the detective powers of the telegraph is the discovery of the whereabouts and the arrest of Rudolph Jaeger, the Rothschild runaway cashier, who fled, leaving behind him a defaulting record amounting to 1,700,000 marks. He was arrested in Ramleh, Egypt, and will be brought back to Frankfort-onthe-Main and made to answer for his crime. But for the telegraph his arrest would have been next to impossible.

A WESTERN man says that men have various ways of carrying money. Butchers, grocers and bakers carry it in a big crumpled wad. Bankers carry it in nice clean bills, laid at full length in a morocco pocketbook. No banker ever folds a bill. Brokers always fold their bills twice. The young business man carries his money in his vest pocket, while the sporting man carries it in his trousers pocket. Farmers and drovers carry their money in their inside vest pocket; and whenever you see a man carry a lot of loose change in his overcoat pocket, you may know that he has at some time been a car conductor or a curbstone merchant. Newspaper men carry their money in some good bank; and poets?-well, poets don't trouble themselves about such a trivial thing as money. THAT the world was inhabited long before authentic history began is now one of the generally accepted facts. There are said to be more than three thousand prehistoric buildings in Sardinia. They are almost all in the fertile districts and are built in groups which are separated from one another by wide and generally barren places. ANOTHER self murder has been added to the long list of American suicides at that maelstrom of vice, Monte Carlo. After losing twenty thousand dollars a young New Yorker blew out his brains at that place a few days ago, and narrowly escaped a surreptitious burial. Verily the fool-killer is fast becoming a useless institution.

An American inventor proposes to abolish stoves and coal mines by tapping the earth's heat. His plan is to sink to the central fires of our planet asbestos tubing lined with some water-tight material and thus secure a steady, continnous and powerful blast of heat, which would be practically inexhaustible and almost inexpensive.

THE betting booth is the curse of the American race track. It has ruined more promising young men than all other evil influences combined. Its suppression is demanded not only by church cople but by all who believe that vice clothed in the garb of respectability is more pernicious than the more vulgar forms of lawlessness.

THAT anomaly, a woman hermit, may be found in Glynn county, Ga., in the person of Miss Ann Piper, who has spoken to but three persons in the past sixteen years. Although she lives with-in two miles of a railroad she has never
